

Figure 1: Rotation curves of various galaxies. The rotational velocities increase and then become roughly constant.[8] This is contrary to the expected behaviour on Newtonian gravitation that, sufficiently far from the nucleus, rotational velocities must decline as $\frac{1}{\sqrt{r}}$ with distance r from the nucleus.